From the Editor

Welcome to the first issue of the Hartbeat.

We are celebrating the reuniting of the former Shires of Cragmere and Ravensley with Hartwood and I feel it was only fitting that we choose a new name for our newsletter so we can start fresh with issue one.

We have always had close ties with one another, and after some initial adjustments, I feel we will become a stronger group. This will take time and effort on all our parts. Where once we fought wars against one another, we shall now hold meetings, events and camp together.

I have heard much talk lately about how people just want to return to the old SCA and one way we can do this, is by returning the fun to our own shire.

While we still need to follow the rules and file our proper paperwork, there is also need for compromise. A council meeting can be organized and still allow for snacks and conversation afterwards. When we run an event it can be well planned and still have room for laughter and games.

I strongly believe that if we spend the time to get together regularly - both in person and through electronic means – we can become more comfortable in our newly expanded shire. And when we are all comfortable with each other, we can invite many new friends to join us, knowing they will also get to experience some of what makes us stay in the Society.

Although this issue was put together in a bit of a hurry, I have included an article by HL Marina on persona, and one by HL Halima on disguising your camping cooler.

If anyone wishes to contribute to the next newsletter please contact me and please keep in mind that release forms will be required in most cases. To view these forms please go to: <http://www.sca.org/docs/library.html> or write me and ask I will send the information to you.

Persona in Parts

Joining a big new group can be a rush. All those fighters and everyone in costume and then you need to choose a medieval name. And after that a multitude of activities can pull you here and there leaving a big blank in your new persona.

Many people choose a persona that matches the times of their friends. And others choose to explore a part of their heritage. And for some it is simply a matter of finding the person who would wear this particular armour or gown. There is no wrong way to find yourself in the SCA. You can start out a Renaissance troubadour and later discover your inner Norseman.

A large part of the enjoyment of playing this game is keeping in character. And so, no matter who you are try to find out a few things about your life. Choose a piece at a time if you like and add more as you go along.

There are the obvious things like knowing the country and the year and what the local coinage is worth and what it is called. But fun comes from the details.

Do you live in a city or in the country? Pick a place and see if you can find a medieval map. If there are none, feel free to create your own. Be like the explorers of old and lay out the landmarks of your lands.

Are you rich or only comfortable? What sort of hovel/manor/castle would you live in? What sort of furniture, servants, guards and family surround you?

Do you travel often? Where and how? Is it on business as a trader or chapman or are you a pious soul who has gone on many pilgrimages? Maybe all your travel has been with the armies or as a mercenary.

Have you been taught to cipher and write a good hand? Were you trained up to be a cleric or keep accounts for a brother who would inherit the estate? Have you attended the great universities of Paris or Padua? And did you graduate or were the drinking and carousing much more compelling than the lectures?

Do you have skills, perhaps learned as an apprentice in a guild? Does this guild sponsor festivals or have a patron saint? Do you sell your goods locally or send them off to far away markets and fairs?

I hope some of these questions has sparked a glimmer of an idea for your persona. And one day I would be delighted to hear who you are and what your chosen world is like.

Marina la Pica (Sometime Byzantine astrologer and sometime Norman housewife.)

When you can't go period, go faux!

Linda J Doerksen
SCA: Halima al-Rakkasa
first webbed July 6, 2006

As I sat at my encampment at Cragmere's Armada, one item was especially glaring... The cooler. Oh, true that there was a cover over it, a cover that slipped at every breeze, never mind every time we opened it. A week later, I made my decision...

Go faux! (For those not familiar with French, pronounced GOH-FOH) That means, when you can't make the real thing, make the plastic thing less obvious.

Ingredients:

- cooler
- paper
- Weldbond white glue
- marker in black or brown
- plastic wrap (opt. for other people)
- Minwax PolyShades, stain and polyurethane in 1 step

Take one Coleman Cooler. In this case, a plastic one with molded-in-place handles. Add a couple of large brown paper bags, or some brown kraft wrapping paper, about twice as much as you think you need. Rip the paper into rough pieces about the size of a splayed hand. Mix up some goop: 2 parts water to 1 part Weldbond glue. Stir it well and pour into a small tray that'll take your paper bits.

Some people say you can duct-tape over the raised lettering, but I find that the glue might not stick well; I prefer to paper the bumpy bits first, and then go over the whole cooler.

At this point, you might want to use a permanent black marker (or brown) to color edges and such that might show; I colored the hinges, and chose to depend on my skill in papering for the rest. You might want to replace the hinges with leather or metal for additional brag-factor.

Be certain you've eaten recently, because once you start, your hands will get stickier than you could ever imagine.

Cover the raised lettering first, dipping each piece of paper into the glue mix and smoothing it onto the cooler, working methodically. I do the top, go down one side, and then go around. I skip the bottom. Overlap a bit, smoothing the edges, and working out any air bubbles. Straight paper edges get used on straight cooler edges. Don't cover the hinges.

At some point, I find the lid keeps closing on me, and sticking edges together that ought not; that's when I put a layer of plastic food wrap along the edge to prevent sticking.

When everything is covered that should be, leave it alone to dry a day or two; when dry, the surface will no longer feel cool. If there are rough spots, take a bit of sandpaper to them to smooth them. I don't get very fussy about it, as my paper layer is usually flat.

Then get some Minwax PolyShades in a dark-ish color, like Antique Walnut Satin, and a foam brush.

Give the papier mache one thin coat, let dry thoroughly, and add a second. If you want a darker finish, add a third coat.

I wouldn't leave this out in the rain, but I wouldn't do that with an untreated cooler, anyway. I do like the leather look, and I'm now planning to add some color to it. Heraldry, perhaps?
